respect to performance on State assessments (see text box lower-right).

Charter schools must meet stated student performance goals, as well as standards regarding fiscal, legal and organizational effectiveness, within the charter period.

Charter school students must take all the same state tests as district students and charter schools have to meet the state's performance requirements relating to the No Child Left Behind Act (NCLB).

Each public charter school is governed by an independent board of trustees which is directly accountable for school performance. That board, while independent, is subject to comprehensive public oversight by the school's authorizer and the Board of Regents. Like district school boards, charter school boards of trustees must adhere to New York State's Freedom of Information and Open Meetings laws.

Charter schools are held strictly accountable for the state and federal funds they receive, are audited annually by a certified public accountant, and subject to audit by the Office of the New York State Comptroller. Charter schools must comply with laws regarding health, safety, civil rights and special education, as well as the provisions of the Charter Schools Act. If a charter school does not live up to its high expectations, the school's authorizer—or the New York State Board of Regents—can find the school in violation of its charter or educational law and actually not renew its charter, i.e., close it down.

And in what is truly an unprecedented level of accountability, charter schools must apply for renewal at the conclusion of every charter period. Unlike their district counterparts, charter schools must continually prove that they have earned the privilege of educating New York's children or risk non-renewal (i.e., closure).

SUNY ACCOUNTABILITY

SUNY has set particularly strong standards for the charter schools it authorizes including that at least 75% of students who have been enrolled for two or more years score at or above proficiency on New York State assessments, and that the school outperforms the local school district and similar public schools state-wide.

Over the course of its first five years, the SUNY Charter Schools Institute has made the difficult recommendation of non-renewal five times. And true to its commitment to accountability and the highest possible standards, the SUNY Board of Trustees has supported those recommendations.

Ongoing Oversight of SUNY Authorized Charter Schools: The School Visit Process

In addition to monitoring a school's compliance with its charter and the law, the State University Trustees view their oversight responsibility more broadly and positively. The Board has adopted a set of practices and policies, including a system for ongoing oversight and evaluation, that strives to balance respect for school autonomy with the need to hold schools strictly accountable for student results.

A central component of SUNY's evaluative oversight system is a schedule of school inspection visits by Institute staff. Generally conducted toward the conclusion of the first and second years of instruction during an initial charter cycle and regularly thereafter, formal school visits (supplemented by more frequent informal visits and communication) are generally performed by two- to four-member inspection teams comprised of Institute academic program staff and, where necessary, outside experts.

Importantly, Institute academic program staff are skilled and dedicated educators with years of prior experience as teachers and administrators in traditional public schools and districts, charter schools and the New York State Education Department. Further adding rigor to the program is the Institute's practice, at the conclusion of the third year of a five-year charter cycle, to seek an independent evaluation of the school by an Institute-designated external inspection team.

Visit team members utilize the school's Accountability Plan and the Institute's Charter Renewal Benchmarks as the lens through which they examine the school (we encourage readers to learn more about the Institute's ongoing oversight and evaluation processes, the SUNY renewal process, and Renewal Benchmarks online at: www.newyorkcharters.org/schoolsRenewOverview.htm).

In all cases, visit teams seek evidence of the effectiveness of a school's education program based on the academic renewal benchmarks related to: curriculum, instruction and assessment; professional development; environment and discipline; and fidelity to the school's charter, including its mission. The visits include interviews with the school leader, classroom observations, reviews of student work, and interviews with staff, parents, students and school board members. The compilation of this evidence is used to formulate a comprehensive written report for schools.

It is important to note that the State University Trustees have instructed Institute staff to be very candid in conveying their insights and observations to the schools so that these documents serve as effective resources for schools as they move toward renewal.

Visit reports also serve as vital communication tools in informing current and prospective school parents and the community-at-large about each charter school's progress.

School visit reports, and related renewal reports, are posted on the Institute's website at: www.newyorkcharters.org/pubsReports.htm, and widely distributed by schools.

About SUNY Authorized Charter Schools

- 40 SUNY authorized charter schools are currently serving nearly 12,000 students.
- Of those 40 schools, 34 (85%) have waiting lists for admission totaling more than 8,000 additional students.
- Five additional SUNY authorized charter schools will open in either fall 2007 or fall 2008.
- As noted previously, five schools have not been renewed, i.e., closed, for failing to meet the goals outlined in their Accountability Plans, the requirements of the New York Charter Schools Act or the rigorous standards of the State University Trustees.
- An Institute analysis of current data (the State Education Department has released test results for three SUNY authorized charter schools not included in its initial report of test results) finds that fully 69% of SUNY authorized charter schools—open for at least one year at the time of the exam—outperformed their local districts on State exams in both mathematics and English language arts. Note that Institute analyses conservatively disregard results for five SUNY schools that opened in Sept. 2005 (thus open for less than one year at the time of the test administrations), as these results, positive or negative, likely reflect the skill level of incoming students rather than the effectiveness of the school.

Detailed performance data on SUNY authorized charter schools is available on the Institute's website at: www.newyorkcharters.org/parentPerformance.htm.
